

creating shortages and subsequent price hikes, according to information from "federal intelligence and law enforcement sources," Quest says in a news release.

We don't tell you this as a business opportunity; it's just to flesh out the story. Remain at your desks, please.

Family, finances forever

Dr. Ron Law believes there's something missing from the world of financial planning: looking beyond the numbers to help parents keep parenting once junior leaves the nest. Not be nags, mind you, but offer advice and guidance to adult children in areas such as financial planning, marriage, family planning, values and lots more.

Thus he started the Family Building Institute in April, designed to help clients go beyond the money and deal with nonfinancial challenges. It's for that time "between parenting and grandparenting," as he puts it.

"I believe you squander some of the power of the family by having no plan," says Law, who's been a cardiologist for 30 years and is president of Cardiovascular Associates in Denver. "When the children are young, you have a plan: Go to school, driving lessons, teach the birds and the bees, go to college. But when you ask parents of adult children, they grimace and shrug, because they don't have a plan."

It's necessary to have "meaningful ning, investment management, real estate investment, the battle between frugality and waste, and more.

The financial portion looms larger as 78 million baby boomers start retiring, and with the Center on Wealth and Philanthropy projecting a wealth transfer of at least $41 trillion in the United States by 2052.

But Law wants to foster more beyond the numbers, and has spoken to wealth advisors in private banking and accounting to introduce his program. Everyone seems to offer the same financial products, Law says, but, "They see a real opportunity in firming up their relationship with their clients, outside the financial dealing."

You may remember Law and his three brothers as the backers of a 1997 movie, "Warriors of Virtue," which he said didn't do well despite the fact it was shown in about 15 countries and sold 1.2 million videos. Its sequel, "Warriors of Virtue: Return to Tao," went straight to video.

Info: www.familybuildinginstitute.com

Comings and goings

- Garlic Jim's Famous Gourmet Pizza will open Sept. 18 at 982 Red Cedar Drive Suite, Highlands Ranch.
- Bubba Gump Shrimp Co. will open Sept. 22 at 1437 California St., Denver.
- Desks Inc., 1385 S. Santa Fe Drive, is under new ownership and will relocate to 12503 E. Euclid Drive in Centennial on Sept. 4. Jay Stark sold the company to Glen Jones.

COMPILED BY BRUCE GOLDBERG
COMINGS AND GOINGS BY NOELLE LEAVITT

in the Denver Business Journal reach the decision makers

80% of our subscribers influence the purchase or lease of a service or product.*

No doubt about it, the Denver Business Journal is where all the action is. I publication puts you in front of this lucrative business and consumer market. Because no other publication is more important to Denver's fast-growing owners and key management than the Denver Business Journal.

Call 303-837-3500

to speak to an advertising representative

denver.bizjournals.com

*2005 Reader
Subscriber Study